A Crusher. mill is now admitted to be the best mill of the kind extant. It has, on everal occasions, contended for the award of merit with other mills, and particularly with the famed "lattle Grant," and in every inecance has taken the premium. At a recent trial with the latter upon the Fair Grounds of the Sonthwestern Agricultural and Mechanical Association, it again took the prize. It stands now without a rival.

This mill combines three principles—that of outling with several steel blades, with that of orushing and grinders. It is heavier and stronger, and less liable to break or get ont of repair, than any other mill before the posts of get ont of repair, than any other mill extant and mailly, it has greater grinding surface, and will grind now, faster, and easier grinding surface, and will grind now, faster, and easier, than any other mill of the steel in use. Big Harpe and Davis.

The Big Harpe and Little Harpe, his brother, were the terror of the surrounding country, in those early times. Two more execrable mensters neverdigraced humanity. They lived with two wo-men ss bad as themselves, in a cave about twenty miles from this tree. Blood and massacre were their delight. It was their custom to sally forth, and without any reason, to murder, without dis-tinction, all the men, women, and children they could find. As the country filled up, the people could no longer submit to their horrid depradations. Men and dogs collected, and took the pursuit. They came on the two Harpes jin a narrow valley, at about two miles from this tree. They immediately mounted their horses, and dashed off in the direction of their cave. Ingoing about five and pastel. miles, Davis, whose horse was very first, had loft his companions, and caught up with Big Harpe, he having previously separated from his brother, the Little Harpe.

Here were two powerful men; armed with rifles, butcher knives, and tomahawks, by themselves, far from help, and bent on death. Davis well knew, that if overpowered he would certainly be killed, and Harpe had determined to dle, rather than he taken alive. They passed and repassed each other frequently making blows without effec, each dreading to fire for fear of missing, and thoreby placing himself at the mercy of his an-tagonist Finally, the horse of Big Harpe fell, and threw his rider, then rese and gallered off. Harpe sprang to his feet, and fired at Davis' horse, Harpe sprang to his feet, and fired at Davis' horse, which reared and fell. They were now not more than tea yards apart. Harpe, whose sagacity was equal to his courage and villainy, kept dodging and springing from side to side, approaching Davis, however, by imperceptible degrees. Davis, discovering he would soon lose the benefit of bis gun, now fired in his turn, but without effect. Hach man now drow his knife, and they closed in merial struggle. Very soon they fell, side by side; but at this juncture, a large wolf dag of Davis' came to his matter's assistance, reised Harpe by the throat. This produced a diversion in favor of Davis, who immediately recovered himself and stabbed Harpe to the heart. The hideous yell which the wrotch sent up, is said still to be heard on dark nights, ringing wildly along the heard. Some of Davis' friends soon joined him; they dug a hole and buried Harpe at the foot of the Lonessme Post Oak.

Little Harpe escaped, went down the Mississipple, and joined the celebrated Mason and his gang, at Stack Island. Soon after Harpe joined him, Mason attacked a flat heat from Cincinnati, and Bach man now drew his knife, and they closed in Mason attacked a flat boat from Cincinnati, and killed all the hands. For this a large reward was offered for Mason; to obtain which little Harpe was decoyed to Natches, and there informed against him and betrayed his friend. On Mason's trial Harpe himself was recognized, was tried and found guilty; and on the same day that Mason was hung he also expirted his orimes. Masor was a very remarkable and extraordinary man. He was distinguished by a strong double row of under and upper teeth, that olonched together with the energy and tenacity of a steel trap.

It seems that while 157 volumes of religious works were read, fixtien and light literature was perused at the rate of 5,273 volumes. This exhibit plainly indicates one of three things: either that there is an absence in our library of good religious works, that our citizens are closely read up in sacred literature, or that they have a taste for the fectitious and trashy. There seems to be a stand-off in the public taste are to poetry and mechanic arts, 309 volumes of each having been read. We have a taste for travel however, which evinced itself in the reading of $28 volumes from the pens of the best authors. The desire for legal information preponderated over that for medical, and thus, while 207 works on the law were read, our medical friends read but 89 volumes of their own literature, bestowing their leisure moments, doubtless, to the perneal of fiction or the study of Soripture. There is an improving taste in the minds of our young people for reading, and during a recont visit to the library rooms we were pleased to see the tellectual appearance, who seemed to be intent in Additions are constantly male to the Library of should feel it his peculiar duty to encourage this

To give our readers an idea of the style of editing which seems to be adapted to the tustes of that community, (for the News is taken and read by marly everybody in the Territory), we give the following "specimen brick," which appeared as the 'leader" in the last number. The article appears under the euphoneous title of

> The editor has left town for a day or two. The 'News' of this week is in charge of the editor's special friend, the Devil. Any infernal articles that may appear may be charged to the firm. Any fighting arking from the present issue will be attended to by a friend, who strikes left-handed,
